

Fight Breaks Out!

Two Deaths are result

Montague's & Capulet's Fight Ends in Death!

By: Rachel B.

A Servant of Lord Capulet, Benvolio reports that yesterday around 2:00 PM he was walking with a fellow servant Mercutio. They were arguing about tempers when a cousin of the Capulet's showed up, Tybalt. Benvolio says that Tybalt demanded to speak with one of them instantly.

Mercutio became annoyed and began to provoke Tybalt when the man he was looking for came into the picture. Romeo is the one Tybalt was looking for and his attention is immediately turned to him. Tybalt then goes on calling Romeo offensive names. Romeo seemed not to mind like his thoughts were not on the present, and is not angered by Tybalt's unwritten attack.

Tybalt then demands Romeo to draw his sword, but Romeo refuses and even started to speak lovingly about Tybalt and his family. Benvolio remembers it as most unusual, and was not really sure where that was coming from.

Romeo then asked Tybalt to put his sword away until he knew his reason for his kindness. Romeo's servant Mercutio then furiously drew his sword and declared "if Romeo will not fight then I will!"

The fight breaks out and Romeo trying to make peace throws himself between the enemies.

Tybalt then stabbed Mercutio under the arm of Romeo and ran away.

Mercutio was wounded badly and cursed the Montague's and Capulet's "A plague o' both your houses!" before he took his last breath and died. Romeo is then fuming with anger and cries that he should have fought not Mercutio. Just then Tybalt comes comes back also angry and they fight to the death. Tybalt is the one to fall.

The Prince decided as a result of the deaths, Romeo is to be banished from the city.
